Night fell.

Mum sat with a wool blanket and her book.

Yig stood cooking eggs. He shook the pan. Smooth and soft. Good. He put the coffee on.

Yig and his mum took the eggs and sweet coffee to the sitting room.

“Thank you, Yig,” said Mum.
“Good cooking skills. Good food.”
She took the wooden spoon to scoop up all the bits.

Yig took a look at his book. Sigh.

“My sweet Yig,” said Mum.

“Do you still feel a bit doom and gloom? A bit moan, groan? I think I can help. Let’s put our boots and coats on. I think we need our tree.”

So they set off to cross the brook and puff up the hill.

The rooks were roosting in the big beech tree.

The moon was high.

“Look up, Yig. It’s the Egg Moon.”

“The Egg Moon?”

“Yes, the Egg Moon, the Pink Moon.”

By the light of the moon, Yig and his mum sat at the foot of the tree. In the cool of the night they sat.

“This is good. I feel good, Mum.”

“Me too, Yig. Me too.”

Questions

Can you answer these questions about the story?

1. Did Mum cook eggs?
2. Did Yig and Mum see the Coffee Moon?
3. Did the trip to the tree help Mum and Yig?
