

FI create Winter Art.

Frost is sparkly.

Blue is like the sky.

We looked at Winter colours that we had seen outside. Our next job was to spread white paint all over our cardboard. We really concentrated on how we should hold our brushes.

Once the board was all white we added little dots of blue and black paint.

It's going light blue.
Violet

It makes lines.

My track
goes round
and round
and round.

We created patterns in the wet paint.

It's sticky!
Alex

We glued on swirling pieces
of wool.

I done it!

A photograph of three young children sitting around a round wooden table in a classroom, engaged in a winter-themed art project. They are wearing red protective smocks. The child in the center is looking down at their hands, which are covered in white paint. The child on the right is holding up a piece of red fabric or paper, also covered in white paint. The child on the left is looking towards the center. On the table in front of them is a large sheet of paper with a winter scene painted in white and blue, decorated with silver and blue glitter, and small red and blue paper scraps. In the background, there is a wooden shelf unit and a round table with a white mug and a striped book.

We think Winter art
always needs
a little bit of frosty sparkle.
