

This week in Science we learned about the clothes that people wear to protect them from the rain. Waterproof fabric was invented by a scientist called Charles Macintosh. His invention was so important that raincoats are named after him!

We worked as a team to investigate which materials were waterproof. by using a syringe and putting water onto the materials and seeing which materials the water seeped through and collected into the tub beneath.

