Brief introduction to subject:

This is an exciting specification which enables students to: study the Theology, Philosophy of Religion and Ethics using various critical, analytical, evaluative approaches in all these areas.

Progression to Career/ University Courses:

An 'A' Level in Philosophy equips you with many of the skills required for other disciplines such as Law, Psychology, Journalism, Public Relations (PR), the Medical/Caring Profession etc. A Philosophy qualification shows universities and employers that you have the ability to analyse, evaluate and be critical; and that you have a capacity for human insight, sufficient cultural appreciation and global awareness. Finally, some may use this qualification as a stepping stone for a vocation in Ministry; or to major in Philosophy and Ethics or Theology with the view of becoming an Academic.

Key Points:

The key points of this specification are that:

- The course will be delivered over two years and assessed terminally at the end of the two years in three papers.
- While AS exams can still be offered, they will no longer count towards the final A2 Grade.
- Students can engage in the use of ICT to deliver presentations to the rest of the class.
- Students can engage in paired and group work.
- Students are able to set themselves targets to provide direction.
- Students develop analytical and evaluative skills essential for university.
- Students develop reasoning and discussion skills essential for university.
- Students develop reasoning and discussion skills essential for university.
