In Spain, the bars serve small plates of food to accompany a drink. This small dish is called una tapa. People usually order a variety of them to share. It is also often given as a complimentary bite to eat when you order a drink (bebida). Spaniards often go "bar hopping" (de tapas) and eat tapas in the time between finishing work and having dinner. Another common time for tapas is weekend days around noon as a means of socializing before proper lunch at home.

The word una tapa actually means 'a lid'. Originally, workers would go to a tavern after a hard day's work. Their glasses of wine or beer would be covered with a slice of food (just like a lid) to keep the flies and dust away from the drink underneath. Nowadays, una tapa is food served on a plate beside the drink. It is no longer used as a lid on top of the glass! Although the word tapa still means lid in other contexts.

Question and Answer Bank- Pets

¿Tienes una mascota?- do you have a pet?

Sí, tengo un perro' yes, I have a dog

Sí, tengo un perro y un gato' yes, I have a dog and a cat

¿Cómo se llama?- What is its name?-Se llama Pepe

¿Cómo se llaman?- What are their names?- Se llaman Pepe y Garfield

Grammar

There are two words for “a” in Spanish:

“un” for masculine nouns and “una” for feminine nouns

Un perro Una tortuga

If you talk about one person/pet’s name the verb is in the singular: “Se llama Pepe”

If it’s two or more the verb is in the plural:
“Se llaman Pepe y Garfield”
