

My name is Emma White and I was a student at Ansford from 2017-2022. Since then, I have studied Maths, Chemistry, and Biology A-levels at Strode College. My application to university started whilst I was at Ansford, where I was supported to find work experience in a local hospital. This, along with other work experiences, volunteering, wider reading and admissions tests helped me to gain an offer from Oxford University to study Medicine. Ansford helped me develop skills such as independent learning and taking responsibility for my education which was essential to push me through admissions tests and interviews, as well as my EPQ on healthcare equality. Ansford also helped me to develop interests in subjects outside of my favourite ones, such as English and History because of passionate and encouraging teachers which helped me grow analytical skills, and evolve these interests further, which I still enjoy today.
